The Bulletin on the California Crash - Failure - Immigration -

NEW YORK, Sept. 3.—The Daily Bul-letin says of the late troubles in San Francisco that the collapse of the bank was a disaster of the most sweeping character, but the individual sacrifices that are reported to be making to undo its effects and restore it are correspondingly impressive.

Nothing could be better calculated to restore confidence. And as the case stands to-day we think we may venture to hope that the embarrassments which many teared must overtake not only the commercial community, but many important business enterprises in that

A decrease of nearly one-third is thus apparent. This, however, may be accounted for by rumors sent to European countries of the stagnation of business here. It is a curious feature that the class of emigrants this season is much superior. Nearly all are supplied with money, and bring household goods and farming implements, evidently with the intention of going down to farming at

He had prepared a long introductory upon art that was calculated to make the public stand in awe and exclaim with Doministands on "Prodigous!" but it all vanished as he entered the gallery, struck not only by the beauties of art tiself, but the srtistic arrangement of art as exhibited by the tasteful and judicious hanging of the long lines of pictures through the main and aujoining halls, not one having been slighted, and not one that has been placed where its true merits will not be seen.

In walking down the alsie, glancing hurried, y at some, and more carefully at other mone conspicuous paintings, one is forced to think how beautifully the present committee has exploded the old loca that there were only two of three men in Cheinnall who knew how to go up an art display.

In the Main Hall the reporter did not linger, but pushed directly into the 6cm Room, though why it should be called so is difficult to tell, unless it is from the diminutiveness of some of the paintings which would be lost sight of a scattered promiseuously about with the larger and more pretentious ones, for certainly there are some pictures in other parts of the building, and even in the "Daub Room," that compare favorably with the average run of the "Gems of the Gem Room." Several, however, in this latter department are destined to creating the circuit, and will, no doubt, find many so condemn as well as admire them.

In the center of Gem Room hangs a small picture, scarcely larger than the palm of one's hand, sadly burdened by a curious and heavy black frame. This is the celebrated and much-talked-of "scene in Grauada," by Fortuny, and owned by Mr. H. C. Gisson, of Philadelphia. The merits of this picture must be left to the judgment of the public, stating only for the heavent of far for that is Philadelphia. The merits of this picture mass

Immediately to the right of Fortuny's hangs a picture by R. Madrago called "The Danoing Jaleo," which, together with it and the "soft Call After the Philage," by J. G. Vibert, the latter of which is a masterpiece, are valued at $2,300. People who judge pictures by the calaiogued price can make a note of this.

Following around in the line of the Fortuny picture, we find a Cortazzo called "The Interrupted Sitting." This picture is truly a genand will prove one of the attractions in this end of the Hall. It is bright and vivacious in its coloring and perfect in drawing and execution.

The arrangement of high and shade and judicious arrangement of objects about the studio make a tout ensemble of a very pleasing character. The expression—half fear and half amusement—of the fair young model, who has hastily concealed herself behind a convenient screen, wrapping an old garment abount her runde limbs and shoulders, and the polite yet anxious manner of the young artist who evidenily wisnes has lady visitors gone, is belied told in this picture than it could be in words.

Farther along the west side of Main Hall hangs the "Founding," by the celebrards artist, Salentin, and owned by S. W. Warren, of Boston. This is one of the treasures, if not germs of art, which is perfect, even to the smallest details, not forgetting the delicate little enveloped, letter in the soft wheker basket of the "Founding," which is to tell the old farmer and his anxious wife and daughters, and curious little sheperd boy from whence the tube stranger has come. Mr. Warren has con ributed everal other pictures for his valuable collection, but this is probably the best.
